Cummings & Sons, and they are unable to come to any decision in the matter and the advice of well-balanced minds outside that firm, has been consulted and yet nothing has been done to satisfactorily settle Mr. Cummings' perplexities as to the advisability of buying another dog. He wants another dog. Two dogs are not enough for his increasing business. We are creditably informed that he is negotiating for the purchase of a South Paris dog and has offered a pretty good sum of money for the animal. We think he needs another dog and hope he may be able to get the one he wants.

BUCKFIELD.

The 4th passed off quietly in this village. The small boys as well as larger ones employed the most of their time with fire crackers. In the afternoon there was quite a gathering of people, and to pass away the time they had a fantastic parade through the streets which was fun for the children as well as some older ones. Then they got up a greased pig race. So they got a small pig and brought him out on the common and greased him all over and let him loose, but Mr. Pig refused to run, but stood still and viewed the crowd with a pig's usual grunt as much as to say, "No run here;" so they exchanged and got another pig and he was like minded. Then they (the boys, not the pigs) concluded to have a sack race, which was quite amusing, and so the 4th passed in our village without accident.

Children's day last Sunday in the M. E. church last Sunday was a success in every sense of the word, the children acting well their part. The pieces they spoke were well learned and recited without a mistake. The church was decorated in the best taste and shape that it ever was. It did look splendid, was the remark of every one. Mrs. R. C. Thomas and Mrs. J. Hutchinson did the decorating. The pastor made a few remarks to the children, which were very appropriate and we trust may have a good effect.

HARRISON.

A company of the village boys signified their willingness, by presenting themselves on 4th of July morning at an early hour to entertain the citizens. We were pleased to see them enjoy their independence. At noon we noticed twenty-two with several pieces of the band, bass and snare drum, dinner bell and trumpet, and nearly all kinds of noises, retired to the band stand for a band concert, one with a black face supposed to act as marshall of the day. For more than an hour, the performance and noise which must be seen to be appreciated, went on. Nothing that can be written would convey an idea of the many tragic terpichorean and other feats, reminding us of the grabbing of a cat's tail and the cat failed to be where the grabbing was. We judge from appearances that both citizens and boys enjoyed the day and evening very well.

A Trip to Hanover.

At about two o'clock Saturday morning a party of twelve started for Hanover in the Gipsey Queen to celebrate the 4th. Horns, whistles and a cornet made known to those living on the way that the 4th had arrived.

The ride was an eventful one, one young man being very much taken up with the "grandmas" that we passed.

Some of the party having never been through that part of the country before, enjoyed the scenery very much.

The girls thought the ferry was something to be dreaded, but they arrived on the other side all safe.

A passing shower compelled us to stop at the hotel so we did not arrive at Camp Bruin until about nine o'clock. Our breakfast was a late one but it was enjoyed by every one, for the morning air had given us a hearty appetite.

Although there were showers one very interesting game of Base Ball (?) was played.

In front of the camp is a very pretty pond in which one young lady came very near taking a bath.

In the afternoon we went fishing and boating. During our stay five of the party caught about 300 brook trout.

In the evening the "chaperette" entertained us by composing appropriate poetry and singing songs. He and Henry gave us a few clog dances. As we were all tired out we went to our rooms about nine o'clock.

The next morning some of the boys went to Stony Brook, while four of the young ladies went down to see the beauties of Hanover.

Our trout dinner was said by all to be the best ever eaten. In the afternoon two of the young ladies thought they would take a walk, and the dam was the chosen place. While there they met two of the Hanover boys, which made it more interesting, for they told them where the best trout were to be caught and where the prettiest wild flowers grew.

At four o'clock we had to say good by to Camp Bruin and started for Norway. We stopped at the Elmwood Stock Farm and saw some very handsome horses, one of which was valued at $10,000. While passing through Milton we met W. E. Mann, who invited us up to his house, which is a fine one and beautifully situated. At last we had to say good by and start on our way again. We enjoyed our ride home and arrived here about ten o'clock.

The same party has been on quite a number of excursions this summer, but our trip to Hanover is pronounced by all to be the best.

We all extend our thanks to Fred Cummings for his invitation, and the 4th of July, 1891, will always be remembered by the party. ONE OF THE NUMBER.

The Boy Was Robbed.

Elmer Lapham, aged 14, a son of L. W. Lapham of Greenwood, who has been at work this spring for Frank Young, says while returning from driving the cows to pasture about 6 o'clock, Tuesday morning and within one-third of a mile of Mr. Young's, he was overtaken by a man, driving a black horse with an open box buggy, and asked to ride.

As soon as he got into the buggy the man siezed him, put a handkerchief into his mouth and proceeded to tie his arms and feet and placed him under the buggy seat and drove on for about half an hour or more. He drove on, the boy says he knows not where, then the man searched his pockets and took from him $6 in money and then drove on a little farther when he was untied and let go.

On inquiring, he found he was at Snow's Falls, a place he never was before, and was told by the man that he was below South Paris, and sent off in the wrong direction for home. He wandered until he came to South Paris village, and was there directed to West Paris.

In the mean time the boy not coming home, having gone with the cows before his breakfast, Mr. Young became alarmed, and his parents were notified. His parents, alarmed at the sudded disappearance of their son, instituted a search, when about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the lost boy arrived in this place and told his story. Immediate measures were taken by the father to put officers on the track.

WEST PARIS.

Haying has begun here.

G. W. Ridlon is sick with the measles at his father's at Trap Corner.

The 4th passed off very quietly here, although for a short time our boys got up a few sports. The fantastics appeared about 10 o'clock with a good display. They marched from here to Trap Corner and back again, giving us a nice time with their performances in the streets. We had a tub race and a sack race which were well carried out.

The Universalist Sabbath School gave a concert in the Baptist house on Sunday evening which was very good. We had two very good declamations by Master Dana Farnum and Master Clifford Curtis.

W. H. Lurvey and wife returned home from Lewiston Monday.

E. D. Andrews has got the bridge near S. B. Locke's mill done so it is now safe to pass over.

I understand that Dennis Doughty of Greenwood, who is working for Isaac Curtis on Young Hill, has taken to himself a better half and now is intending to take Mr. Curtis and wife into his family. Dennis perhaps thinks it would be better to have Mr. Curtis and wife live with him than to have Mr. Doughty and wife work for Mr. Curtis, for Mr. Curtis is a hard customer on a hired man who has just got married and Mr. Doughty says he has found it out. I think it would stand Dennis in hand to look out for Isaac this summer.

P. C. Fickett is making some repairs on his house and is to finish off an up stairs rent to let. Ben Davis is doing the work.

The Universalist sewing circle met with Mrs. J. C. Ridlon Tuesday afternoon and evening.

Your cor. called at the cottage Monday. I found the boarders an intellegent and interesting company. There will be more arrivals next week. The cottage has been enlarged and repaired inside and out to the cost of $500. The rooms are large and well ventilated. The grounds are nicely fixed around the buildings and everything looks tastily. Mrs. Dudley will run a team to Locke's Mills Depot to all the regular passenger trains for the convenience of the boarders.

Her husband preceded her to the heavenly mansions several years ago. A patient, worthy life has found its reward and heard the Master say, "Well done." Many of her friends on reading the above will gratefully recall her cheerful hospitality, her words of helpful encouragement and her unyielding love for her children, when coupled with divine power in the march of time and eternity. Earth is ended and eternity begun very suddenly, after eating at the breakfast table and turning away, her last words were for her daughter Nelly to come, just in time to say as it were, "Good bye, Nelly, will you meet me and greet me just on the other side, and all was over. She had crossed the river and crossed all alone, where comes the rainbow, the angels, the Father and Son of God.

WENTWORTH'S LOCATION.

The Wilson's Mills correspondent inquires who the drunken brawlers, mentioned in a previous issue, were. Most of our farmers began haying this week. The favorable weather has improved the grass very much, but still the crop will be only about two-thirds as large as last year. The apple crop is not doing well. The trees blossomed abundantly and the young apples set fairly well, but farmers complain that the little apples are now dropping off very badly. In a few cases more than half the entire crop has already dropped off. Potatoes are doing finely and give promise of a much better yield than last year. Corn is backward and many complain that it came up very uneven, but with good weather gives promise of an average crop.

Parker Post, No. 151, G. A. R., celebrated the Fourth by a picnic at New Hall. It was intended to meet in the grove, but the rain prevented and nearly a hundred met at the hall. There was a picnic supper and speaking by the Post and others.

Sunday afternoon as W. O. Brown's team was standing in front of the Cong'l Church at the Center, the check rein became entangled with the thill and drew the horses head to one side. This frightened him and he started to run, but as the rein drew on one side he made a circle, overturning the carriage and throwing himself. He was secured but the carriage was nearly used up.

ALBANY.

Cold and windy, overcoats in good demand.

The fourth proved a damper, but the people were patriotic and full of courage, so in the afternoon in spite of the cold black clouds that rolled up in the west so threatingly there was a good sized crowd met at Cole's grove and passed the afternoon very pleasantly and we trust profitably, but on account of the cold they adjourned to the vestry of the church where two long tables were well filled with what seemed to us all kinds of good things to eat and enough for all. Perhaps I should have said before that the time in the grove was spent in recitations by the Sunday-school children, singing by the choir, and remarks by the superintendent and the pastor, Rev. Will C. Wood of Boston, who gave us a brief sketch of our country and nation from its discovery down to the present day, touching on the most important points as he passed, which was well worded and well received by the audience. After this there was swinging, pitching of quoits, running, jumping and laughing, interspersed with the music of the fire cracker from the hand of the small boys. At eight o'clock in the evening the crowd begun to swell in numbers until the common was well covered with people from far and near, old and young, fat and lean together, regardless of the weather, when all at once several ghosts, if ever there was one, appeared rapidly in something white, saying over something I could not tell what, and then begun to sing and then went as they came and we trust to the same place they must have left. Then came the fireworks which consisted as usual of flower pots on fire, sky rockets, Roman candles, fire flyers, mixed with snap crackers for the boys and a lot of other things. All passed off without a misshap of any kind and all went home feeling well paid for the effort, we trust.

Ernest Woodbury of Castine is stopping for a few days with Dea. J. H. Lovejoy.

Arthur Andrews still lives but is thought to be failing.

Gilbert Wardwell and son have come out with a new buggy.

The Squeak of Her Oxford Ties.

BY F. M. W.

My love and I one summer night
Went out to take a walk,
So fair she was! A lovely sight!
I meant to have a talk.
Her shoes were new; an entrancing squeak
Was heard at their fall and rise,
I had no ear for anything
But the squeak of her Oxford ties.

"Two souls with but a single thought,
Two hearts that beat as one;"
My thoughts, an I mind and soul held naught
But her, my life, my sun,
I told my wild mad love to her,
But far above my sighs
I heard that never ceasing sound,
The squeak of her Oxford ties.

Alas, my plea no answer got,
No sweet reply I heard,
And I accepted my sad lot,
(Poor fool!) without a word.
She looked on me reproachfully,
A look of sad surprise,
And still there echoed on the air
The squeak of her Oxford ties.

In silence then we wandered back,
I saw her to her home;
And then along Life's dreary track
Was left in grief to roam.
A year passed by, it dragged like lead,
A year of fruitless sighs,
But one sweet sound remembrance held,
The squeak of her Oxford ties.

No longer could I stand the strain,
So back one day I went,
And kneeling at her feet again,
I gave my love full vent.
She looked on me with scorn and said,
"I never heard such lies,"
And even in my pain I missed
The squeak of her Oxford ties.

She said, "You asked me once before
If I with you would wed,
I gave assent, and since that hour
I've seen you not," she said.
I did not rise, and then on me
She gazed with scornful eyes,
I said, "Your answer low was drowned
By the squeak of your Oxford ties."

Her scornful look gave way, and one
More loving took its place.
I took her in my arms and then
A blush suffused her face.
We're married now, and happy are,
But oft I think with sighs
Of the misery that came to me
From the squeak of her Oxford ties.

PLAIN MISS BARSTOW.

"I am a widow, as of course you perceive by my mourning. My poor Arthur died five years ago, and left me this estate and a comfortable income. My only brother is a bachelor, and spends his winters in the city, but his summers with me. I expect him here next week. He is wealthy and much sought after, and I have had a terrible time protecting him from the snares set for him by every old maid and young miss in the neighborhood. I had one pretty governess, and I firmly made up my mind that I would never have another. There shall be no more running round the garden moonlight evenings and calling buttonhole bouquets. Do you know, Miss Danvers, I actually caught that sly Miss Garfield in the very act of pinning a rose on my brother's coat! Of course I paid her a month's salary in advance and sent her off. I am obliged to have a governess for my two poor darlings, but it shall never be said that my only brother was sacrificed on my account to one of those sly, deep, pretty governesses. No, I have had enough of them. I suffered from nervous apprehension all the time Miss Garfield was here. Another week the sly thing would have been my brother's wife."

"I don't think I shall trouble his peace of mind," said Lucille languidly, inwardly laughing at Mrs. Lamotte's tribulations. "I am sure we will not wander in the garden and pick roses together."

"Oh, I am sure there is no danger with you," said Mrs. Lamotte.

Several days went quickly by, Lucille being charmed with her new life. She completely won the hearts of her two little pupils, and found both interest and amusement in teaching them. She had now regular duties which she was obliged to fulfill, and found life much more bearable than at Barristown.

One morning when she entered the breakfast room she started back as if she had seen an apparition, for there in an easy chair, his handsome head on his hand, his blue eyes bent on the carpet as if in melancholy dreaming, sat Geoffrey Wayne. He was evidently entirely at home, for, hearing a footstep, he looked up, saw Lucille, and rising from his chair came forward, saying:

"Miss Danvers, I am sure. I arrived very late last night, and saw my sister but a few moments, yet she found time to tell me of you and the love Maud and Willie bear you."

He did not recognize her then. Why should he? She had been in full dress at both places where they had met, and her hair had been dressed with flowers and sprinkled with gold dust. Of course she looked vastly different now in a plain dress of dark muslin and her luxuriant hair in a simple coil. And of course, too, Geoffrey Wayne would never think of finding in his sister's governess the sister of his fiancee, whom he had been told was at Barristown.

Before Lucille could collect her thoughts sufficiently to reply Mrs. Lamotte entered, evidently not at all disturbed at finding her handsome brother and her homely governess together. Lucille saw by the way she joked and laughed at Geoffrey about matrimony and the snares spread for him that she knew nothing of his engagement to Emily.

Mr. Geoffrey Wayne had come to pass the summer with his sister as usual; but to the lady's astonishment he did not enter with his usual zest into her plans for croquet parties and archery matches. Lucille noticed that he was grave almost to melancholy, and when letters came from Emily would go off to the little arbor at the foot of the garden and sit for hours smoking gloomily.

Lucille was sitting alone on the front piazza reading one evening when little Maud came running excitedly to her.

"Oh, Miss Danvers!" she cried, almost out of breath, "come to Uncle Geoffrey. A horrid horse kicked him in the leg, and it is broken. Peter and Sam carried him into the parlor, and Peter has gone after a doctor."

Lucille hardly waited to hear all the child said, for at the first intimation she received that Emily's lover had been hurt she started from her seat and hurried to the parlor.

Geoffrey was lying on a sofa with his brows contracted by pain, his handsome face white with suffering. Lucille, taking a bottle of cologne from the mantel, drew a chair close to the sofa, and began bathing his head very softly and gently. He did not open his eyes, however, and it was only when his sister came running in wild with excitement that he spoke. Then he begged her to be quiet, and said his accident would not amount to much. But Mrs. Lamotte would not be quieted, and wept and moaned until the doctor's coming sent her from the room. She professed herself utterly unable to nurse her brother.

"I feel like fainting when I go into a darkened room," she said. "My feelings completely overpower me when I see him lying there so white and still. Miss Danvers, help me in this. I know I can trust you. I am sure I am not doing a dangerous thing. You are not pretty and sly like that horrid Miss Garfield, and you are the very one who can read and amuse poor Geoffrey. Promise me you will do so."

Lucille, with a bitter pang at her heart as she thought that Mrs. Lamotte could indeed trust her to pay to Emily's fiancee any little attention he needed.

But Mrs. Lamotte was wrong in thinking it not a dangerous thing to throw these two young people so much together. As Geoffrey felt the touch of the cool, soft hands on his head he learned to admire them. As he listened to the low, sweet voice, which appeared never to weary when reading aloud to him, he learned to love it. As he saw the hundred different efforts Lucille made each day to interest him and render his confinement to one room less dull and irksome, he learned to worship her. He forgot her plain face, and contrasted her character only with that of Emily.

For he no longer loved the girl to whom he had bound himself. He had been infatuated with her marvelous beauty, caught in the coils of her shimmering golden hair and musical laugh, and he believed his infatuation to be love. But when thrown constantly with her whom he had believed as perfect in character as in face he had discovered her mind to be shallow, her one passion to be the leader of society. She was vain, exacting and selfish, and had no real love for the man she had promised to marry. But Geoffrey believed his honor demanded that he should fulfil to the letter the vow he had pledged, and the wedding was to take place in October. He had made no effort to break his fetters, though they had grown so galling. He had thrown aside all prudence, listened not to the voice of reason, and had asked Emily to marry him after an acquaintance of barely six weeks.

The knowledge of Geoffrey's love for her came upon Lucille like a thunder clap. Thinking of him only as her sister's betrothed, she had never imagined that her gentle ministrations to him during his illness had awakened into being the tenderest emotions of his breast. He was nearly well, and was sitting in the twilight one evening when she entered the room, and not perceiving in the gloom a chair directly before her, she stumbled over it and fell to the floor, striking her head with considerable force against a small center table.

With one bound Geoffrey was by her side, and lifting her in his arms he cried:

"My darling! my darling! tell me you are not hurt. Speak to me, Lucille, my dearest, tell me you are not hurt." His voice was hoarse with emotion, and hot kisses fell upon the girl's brow as he pressed her to his breast, forgetting Emily, honor, everything, but that he loved this little governess of his sister's.

"Stop," cried Lucille, when she could speak from amazement and excitement; and she freed herself from his embrace. "How dare you speak so to me, Geoffrey Wayne, when at this moment you are engaged to another?"

"You know of my engagement, then? But it matters not how you have learned of it, for it is true. But as Heaven hears me, I love you only, and wish with all sincerity that my hand could follow my heart."

Lucille staggered back against the wall, and dropped her head in her hands. One instant she stood thus, and in that instant the knowledge came to her that she loved this man who was to be her sister's husband. Oh, what a cruel wrong she had done Emily! She raised her face and looked at Geoffrey through her tears, so haggard, so wild, that he was startled at the change in her countenance, and then fled from the room like a frightened deer.

They did not meet again until the next day, and then both were calm, and avoided being left alone together.

Emily wrote to Lucille, thinking her still at Barristown, urging her to return home to act as bridesmaid at her wedding, but Lucille wrote that she could not, and Emily was forced to be satisfied without any explanation of why it was not possible for her only sister to be with her on an occasion of so much importance.

October in all its red and golden beauty came only too soon for Geoffrey, who would willingly have deferred his wedding had it been possible. But it had been arranged to take place on the 10th of the month, and on the 8th he left Wildwood Park, unaccompanied by any one, for Mrs. Lamotte, much to her grief, could not leave home on account of the illness of her youngest child. And she was a faithful mother, even though a silly woman. She was greatly rejoiced that Geoffrey was to marry so well, and talked of nothing but the wedding from morning till night, until it was almost a relief to Geoffrey when the 8th of the month came, and the day when he could leave the Park.

On the evening of the 10th Lucille went alone to the little arbor at the foot of the garden, and throwing herself upon a seat, leaned her head down on the little rustic table, and gave her mind up to painful thoughts and memories. As she recalled Geoffrey's avowal of love, and pictured the scene in which he was even now indulging, the wedding display and the beauty of the happy bride, her tears fell fast, and sobs shook her slender frame. A tempest of regret was sweeping over her, and she could not, cared not to, stay it.

"Lucille," said a grave, manly voice, "Lucille, my love, my darling, look up, and tell me if you really care so much for me as to weep like this."

Lucille started to her feet, bewildered as she saw that it was Geoffrey who spoke, Geoffrey who stood before her, his face illuminated by love.

"Emily!" she gasped. "Where is Emily?"

"She gave me my freedom, Lucille," was the reply, in a low, almost sad tone. "She cared not that we were to be married this evening. She eloped last night with the Count Lazano, whose aunt died barely four days since, leaving him a handsome fortune."

"Oh, my sister, my sister!" groaned Lucille, covering her face with her hands, and sobbing more violently than before.

"Your sister!" repeated Geoffrey. "You do not mean"——

"I mean that I am not the poor governess you thought me, but Lucille Danvers Barstow."

"What a wonderful tale! quite romantic! But, Lucille, I must kiss you once more to see if you are really before me, that I am not dreaming"——

A sudden crackling in the bushes about the arbor prevented Geoffrey from carrying out his intention, and Mrs. Lamotte, purple with rage, appeared before the lovers.

"A second Miss Garfield!" cried the widow in a shrill voice. "So the homely as well as the pretty governesses inveigle my brother into making love to them. I thought better of you, Miss Danvers; as for you, Geoffrey, I believe you would make love to any girl"——

"Stop, Jannette!" cried Geoffrey, whose indignation had prevented his checking his sister's tirade before. "Stop, Jannette; you do not know of whom you are speaking. Let me explain why Miss Danvers came here and who she is."

He then gave a brief explanation of why Lucille had become a governess, and told her relation to Emily.

Mrs. Lamotte would hardly credit her ears, and almost fainted from surprise. But when Geoffrey had finished his story she no longer upbraided him or opposed his love, but offered her congratulations effusively, "hoping Geoffrey would succeed in getting married the next time he invited her to his wedding."

And he did succeed, for six months later cards were out for the marriage with "the plain Miss Bartow," and this time the bride did not elope.—Boston Traveller.

For the Cruiser Maine.

Largest Set of Engines Yet Built for a Yankee Warship.

The machinery for the big armoured cruiser Maine will be ready for assembling aboard ship in thirty days. This statement was made yesterday by N. F. Palmer, jr., president of the N. F. Palmer, jr., Company. All the parts of the Maine's engines have been completed. The engines have been fully erected at the works of the company. The builders are now engaged in fitting oil cups, lubricating parts and various small work, which might be left until the machinery is placed aboard the Maine. Mr. Palmer desires, however, to have every part fitted before the engines leave the company's houses. The machinery will be transported in lighters from East Twelfth street to the Maine at the navy yard.

As the machinery of the Maine now appears in the shops of the builders, it is one of the finest pieces of marine engine work ever seen in an American establishment. It is the largest set of engines as yet built for an American war vessel. The engines must develop as the mean of a four hours' trial, 9000 horse power. The contract price of the Maine's machinery is $750,000. The seventh payment, amounting to over $73,000, was authorized Saturday by the government engineers superintending the work. The contract call for the completion of the machinery in a year from next October. On that date the engines must not only be aboard ship, but ready for trial.

The Maine's boilers, eight in number, of the Scotch tubular type, are practically finished. They are now lined up in the boiler shops of the company, occupying the same relative position that will assigned them aboard ship. They will be placed against the side of the vessel, affording a fore and aft fireroom. This fireroom will be divided by an athwartship bulkhead, giving two firerooms with four boilers to each. The boilers are designed to furnish an efficiency of 60.3 horse power to the square foot.

Kleptomania.

A Strictly True Story for the Children.

Our good ship had entered the "Doldrums," on the passage from Australia to San Francisco. All hands on board were impatient for a friendly breeze to take us on towards our own land once more. The children, tired of the carpenter's shop, and deck, all rushed down to the cabin together, for mother to tell them a story. "Tell us something which happened when you were a little girl," said Cliff.

Well, about forty years ago, I was a little girl and lived in a town on the Penobscot, in Maine. It was a country place, and the people were all acquainted with each other, and nearly every family for miles around had lived on the same rugged farm for the greater part of their lives.

Nothing out of the usual course could happen to an individual or to a family, that all were not interested in and did not wish to know about.

We lived on a farm, and father superintended the farm work and also kept a store, which supplied the people about us with groceries and dry goods, a curious mixture, where could be found every thing generally needed by the community, from a wheel head, or a cheese hoop, to a set of dishes or the material for a suit of clothes.

As there were no stores of ready made clothing in those days, people bought cloth, or trimmings, as many wove their own cloth and hired a tailoress to come to the house and cut and sew, until the men and boys were all suitably clad for the season.

One bright morning, late in October, father came from the store to the house, stepping in a quick, nervous manner, which gave us children to understand that something unusual had occurred. He hunted up mother, however, and I heard him say: "Rachel, somebody has broken into the store." "Why, Jonas! you must be mistaken. Have you missed anything?" "Yes, you know Moses Benson is going to be married Thanksgiving, and he wished me to get for him a waistcoat pattern, and I brought home half a dozen silk brocade patterns for him to select from, and four of them are gone; and besides, half a dozen knives and forks, and they were taken last night, for Benson and I were looking at them just before dark, and he was to select this afternoon when he comes for the mail, and there are but two left. There may be, of course, other things taken, but I've so far missed only these." "It must be some straggler along the road," said mother.

"No," said father, "it is some one who knew just where to go for them, as they were not on the shelves with other goods but in a trunk under the counter, for I intended to return all not wanted at once as I seldom have a call for this kind of goods." "Well," said mother with a grave look, "I do not like to think any of the neighbors would do such a thing." Father replied, "I do not know where to look for the thief, unless it is that Joe Mack, who has been at work haying about the neighborhood. Some say he none too good." "Really," said mother with a woman's sense of perception rather than logic, "I never did like the looks of his eyes." Just here came a loud knocking at the door. Jake Treadwell wanted a plug of tobacco, and father, in his excitement, had left no one in the store. "All right, Jake," said father; so telling mother not to speak of the theft to any one he went to the store to wait upon Jacob.

Now, as they walked along it occurred to father that Jacob was very proud of some military achievements of his own in the "Roostic War," as he called the little affair of the Aroostook country, then fresh in the minds of the people; and not half believing he could recover the goods or find the thief he resolved to tell Jacob of the theft, and hire him to watch in the store nights for a week or so. Jake Treadwell was a good specimen of the Yankee. He was very tall and quite thin with carrot colored hair and blue, honest looking eyes that always wore a merry twinkle. He was quite a gossip, too, but in real earnest in all he did, whether it might be the making of the winter cider in the old orchard on the hill, or the preparing for the "Roostic War."

When they had entered the store and were safe from listeners father said: "Jacob, I've been robbed!" Jake's favorite expressions were, Zounds! and By Dracious! He looked astonished. "What do ye mean, Squire Hall?" "Why, somebody got into the store last night and stole some goods, and I want you to watch in the store a week, and I'll pay you well for it." "By dracious! I'll do it," answered Jake. "Well you must have something to defend yourself with, and in case one enters sing out and I shall hear you in the house. Be on hand tonight will you, Jacob?" "Yes, sir," answered Jacob.

My brothers and sisters and myself were very quiet all the rest of the day. The air seemed to us full of mystery. We imagined that an event not much less in importance than the capture of a Thunderbolt or Lightfoot was shortly to be expected, and our curiosity was not a little heightened by the fact that there seemed a good deal about it not intended for us to know. However, our attention was quickly diverted by the appearance towards night of Peter Carter, a big, bluff, heavy-voiced man, who asked if he could "borry a fox-trap," for, said he, "the tarnal foxes have carried off our young geese, and I'm afeared they'll get the old ones next." Brother Bob got the trap for him and he went home, as fully determined to capture a robber that night, by the help of his trap, as Jake had been to do so by the aid of his musket. Just after supper Jake made his appearance, ready for action, warmly clad in a huge overcoat. "Where are your arms Jacob?" asked father, half laughing to see how excited he appeared, as if he already had a prisoner. "Here! by dracious!" said he, and opening his coat, he disclosed a heavy, old-fashioned musket, hugged closely. "Same one I carried to the Roostic, and Gineral Muster." Father laughed and said, "Well, Jacob, I guess you'll hold your prisoner when you catch him." "We'll see," said Jacob. "Shall I lock the door inside?" "No," said father, "the lock is broken, and I will close the door lightly, and put the lock in place as nearly as I can and let it remain as it is at present."

About nine o'clock in the evening Jake lay down on the floor behind the counter, and carefully buttoned his heavy coat around him, as the nights were chilly. Taking a bunch of cotton warp for a pillow, he placed the musket within reach on the floor, and while intently listening to every sound, fell asleep. The moonlight shining through a window helped to make him wakeful, and suddenly he heard the click of a broken lock, then a slow pressure, and the door closed with the least possible noise. One, two, three soft creeping steps on the floor, and in a flash Jake had bounded over the counter, and aiming the musket at the culprit, shouted, "Halt! surrender!" with no doubt much military swagger. A terrified scream from the prisoner awoke the whole house, and while all of us children kept close to mother, father hurried out to see what could be the matter. He pushed open the door, and was greeted by Jacob's shout of "By dracious, I've got him." "Got who?" asked father. "Don't know his name, but I guess he's got one he won't be so very proud on."

The prisoner did not look to be a very large person, and had on an old-fashioned cloak, called a pelisse, and a black hood that nearly covered the face. Then, for the first time the culprit spoke. "Oh! what will my poor father and mother say?" "Why, who are you?" asked father. "Maria Bickford," "My God!" exclaimed father, "and you were here last night." "Yes." "Well, I'll take you right home," and going to the house to get an overcoat, he told mother where he was going and mother cried, and we all cried to see mother feel so badly. You see, mother had known Maria ever since she was born, and all her family had lived on the other side of the mountain, as the big granite hill was called. Well, with father on one side, and Jake on the other, Maria walked home, about two o'clock in the morning, and, as they passed Peter Carter's house, a loud clamor among the geese arrested their attention. At that moment, out rushed Peter in his night robes, and, as he saw old "Reynard" scampering off, dragging a goose with him, he shouted in a loud rough voice, that almost seemed to shake the earth under their feet "You've got her haint ye?" Poor Maria thinking it was some one else on her track shrieked again and they hurried her along on the lonely mountain path to her home. I can never describe to you, children, the grief of her father and mother, to see their daughter, a young girl of seventeen, coming home in such a plight, at that hour in the morning. She had worn stockings but no shoes and her stocking feet were all worn through on the frozen hubbles and rocks of the rough road. Her father said he would settle it in any way father wished, and he told Mr. Bickford, if he would pay him for the goods, he wanted no more.

He did so, and the goods were all found hidden in different places, but it was not the first of her stealing, though she had not before been so bold, and her parents were discouraged of ever breaking her of her dreadful habit.

"Well, mother," asked Tom, "wasn't there any Canada for thieves?"

"No, my son, Canada was a long way off, and a good place for honest people, and stealing was stealing in old times, but now it is Kleptomania and Canada is for Canadians, and, yes, for Cashiers."—Maine Woman.

CONDITIONS vs. THEORY.

THOSE who are in ill health are confronted by a condition, not a theory, although there are numbers of people ready and anxious to theorize about it. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, S. S. S. will do the work of renovation. In cases of indigestion, loss of appetite and general debility, this wonderful medicine acts with almost miraculous certainty. It restores the activity of the liver, purifies the blood and builds up the system. As a tonic for young and old it is without a rival. Though it is powerful in its effects, the youngest or the oldest can take it with the most beneficial effects. S. S. S. has behind it a record of half a century, and is more popular as a household remedy to-day than ever before.

MR. WILCOX has for years held the responsible position of operator at Rochester Union Depot, which is a junction for four railroads.

ROCHESTER, N. H., Nov. 18, 1890.

DANA SARSAPARILLA CO.:—

Messrs.—I wish to tell you what DANA'S SARSAPARILLA has done for me by taking a month's vacation, and using the Sarsaparilla three times a day.

When I went away the first of October I couldn't sleep nights or work days. I was nervous, had no appetite, and felt all tired out from morning until night. Had no ambition to work. My kidneys were swollen and ached so that I was unable to sit down, or lie down, and take any comfort. So I thought it about time to take a rest and see if I could obtain help.

I bought two bottles of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA, and three weeks from the time I commenced to take it, I had gained ten pounds. My back was greatly improved, and my nervousness had left me. I could eat as much as any well man ought to eat. And best of all no ache or pain comes to disturb my night's rest. I take DANA'S SARSAPARILLA every day, and it has done wonders for me, and saved me lots of expense from doctors.

I remain, hastily,

The Moose, and Deer Call.

Interesting Talk by an Experienced Hunter.

I read with a great deal of interest your extract which you ascribe to "J. G. R." Mr. R. is an old hunter, but I am afraid some of his facts are evolved from his inner consciousness. If not, then he has had a unique experience, and is probably the only man in the country who has ever heard deer calling to each other, and it would be an interesting and important contribution to natural history, for Mr. R. to give the form or sound their call. After forty years of study and experience in the best deer regions of the State, the writer has never heard a sound uttered by a deer, except in the extremity of danger or agony, as when they are seized by a wolf or a savage dog, or their spine is severed by a rifle ball; and then their prolonged and pitiful bleat will make a man, in whom the milk of human kindness is not congealed, shudder.

The fawns have a call similar to that of a young lamb; but pitched on a much higher and shriller key; and I have never known them to utter it except when suffering the pangs of extreme hunger, owing to death of their dam. Bucks, especially the old ones, have a hoarse, and savage bellow which they frequently give out, when seized from behind, by dog or man, and on rare occasions when engaged in fierce combats against each other, and again a soft, tremulous, and quickly reiterated call, when they suddenly catch sight of the doe, during the rutting season.

The above mentioned writer, asks if it is instinct that teaches a moose to go in a straight line from mountain to mountain. If one answers, yes; what wiser are we? For who can define that mysterious faculty called instinct? To call it a lower form of reason is less than no definition, and the writer reached a firm belief that many, if not all animals possess a sixth (and perhaps, a seventh and eighth) sense of which we are devoid, and can only faintly guess at. To illustrate: Half a dozen men, one of them owning a dog, may each of them pull on a pair of new, heavy soled boots, and going out of doors, separate, and travel off. When all are out of sight, let out the dog. He will take his owner's tracks without an instant's hesitation. Does any one suppose that the scent of that man's foot, penetrated through an inch of solid sole-leather, in the time he was getting from the chain to the door? Bear with me while I further illustrate this mysterious quality, as exemplified in the moose. In 1841 my father moved into Greenbush on a lot of wild land just then opened for settlement. Moose were then plenty, right there, less than twenty-five miles from Bangor! Five of them yarded across the rear of our lot that winter. Between our place and the Penobscot river three miles away, stretched, (and stretches) a series of open bogs on which the moose delighted to gather in summer. From these bogs one of the broadest and best defined moose paths that I have ever seen, (and I have passed many seasons in the home of the moose) led directly to Passadumkeag Mountain, fifteen miles away. At that time I was the typical, "barefoot boy" just big enough to tote around an ancient fowling piece, at least a foot longer than myself. In my wanderings after partridges, I learned to know every foot of that path for some miles and when I saw the decayed logs trodden into dust, the roots of green trees denuded of their bark, and the earth in the softer places deeply indented below the surrounding surface, often found myself wondering, even at that early age, for how many years, had the feet of these, the noblest deer of this continent, guided by their unerring instinct (that is what we must call it after all) trod that ancient path.

Time passed on, the lots were quickly taken up, the rich corn rustled, and the golden wheat gracefully bowed its head to the passing breeze where the old moose path formerly ran; and on autumn evenings the joyous laughter of the huskers resounded, where, a few years before, nothing more melodious was heard than the howl of the gaunt wolf or the snarl of the prowling lynx; for more than twelve years, not a moose had been seen or heard of in that part of the country; but one day in the latter part of February three Indians hunting in the vast forest between the mountain and the St. Croix, discovered the yard of a solitary moose. The snow was very shoal that winter, but the noble red men wanted meat and the dogs were let loose. All that day the chase was hotly pressed, and at night the exhausted moose was left in a tract of heavy woods between Cold Stream Pond and Piscataquis Falls on the Penobscot, where the big pulp mill stands. Early next morning the hunt was resumed. The moose worked her way down the river till she struck the Greenbush bogs and then started east on the old path. Between the bog and clearing there was still a mile of woodland, unfit for cultivation; then nearly a mile of cleared land and again a quarter of a mile of woods before reaching the tier of lots on which we lived. In this piece of woods, I heard about the middle of the afternoon, a furious barking of curs, for at least an hour; then three heavy reports from a blunderbuss, followed by an unmistakable Indian war-whoop! Greatly excited I put on my snow-shoes and went over. There lay the moose already disemboweled, and two tiny calves extracted by the Cæsarian operation, were carefully laid aside for supper! But what immediately attracted my attention, was the fact that the track, as far back as I could see implicity followed the old moose path. Curiosity impelled me to follow it back, and when after following the well-remembered windings of the old trail, through a mile of clearing, I found that the track, as far as I could tell, did not once deviate from it. I was confounded! The insoluble problem of a three-years-old cow moose, following for a mile through mowing-field and pasture, a path which had not been trodden for more than a dozen years, was fully presented to my mind. I respectfully present the question to the hunters and scientists for their consideration.

Mr. R. suggests that a moose knows longitude. When I was a little shaver, living on the west bank of the Piscataquis, my father crossed the river in a boat, went half a mile up the other side to a neighboring house, bought a four week's old pig, and putting him in a bag, with his nose just sticking out through a small hole to prevent suffocation, brought him home and put him in a pen which he had prepared for that purpose. The next morning the pen was vacant and our neighbor sent us word that a very wet and disconsolate prodigal son had returned to the bosom of his family. The singular fact of his swimming the river (at that place fully a quarter of a mile wide) after being brought home enveloped in a bag, was instantly accounted for by the wise people of that locality by the fact that a pig knows longitude! This stupendous solution so confidently hurled at me in my tender years nearly proved my ruin. I used to try and grapple with it after going to bed at night, but it was too vast; it enveloped, overwhelmed, and rolled over me till I invariably lost consciousness, in which condition I remained until rescued by my elder brother in the morning, by being pulled out of bed.

When I got old enough to study "geography" the subject presented itself to me in a new form. Why should not a moose know latitude! It surely would be as beneficial for an animal to be aware how far he was north of the equator, as to know how far he was west of the Royal observatory at Greenwich. But hold! There is no end to this subject, and visions of a dreary waste (basket) arises before me. I leave the question right here with sincere apologies to yourself and your readers for the fearfully elongated proportions, to which this screed has attained.—Phonograph.

HANDSOME VERSUS HOMELY.

Who is that fine looking lady that we just passed Clara? Why, that is Mrs. Snow. Well, there, what a change; when I saw her last, her skin was so sallow and muddy looking, it's no wonder I didn't know her. What has produced that lovely complexion? I heard that she took SULPHUR BITTERS, the great Blood Purifier, and now would not be without them. 27-28

A STRONG MAN or woman, in good health, is kept pretty busy trying to ward off disease, while sick ones are constantly seeking a remedy for their sufferings. We don't want you to infer that our Remedy is a "cure all,"—but it is a thoroughly reliable Blood Purifier, acting directly on the digestive organs, invigorating the liver and bowels, thereby strengthening the whole system. Trade mark "L. F." Beware of imitations. Take only "L. F."

STANDISH, April 5, 1891.

DEAR SIR:—This is to certify that I have used your Bitters for the past four years and consider them one of the best medicines that I have ever found, and I have tried many kinds. When I commenced taking them I could not walk or labor but little I was so weak. But after taking one bottle of "L. F." Atwood's Bitters, I was a new person and could do my usual amount of labor; for which I feel very grateful. Yours respectfully, J. D. WADLEIGH.

If your dealer does not keep them send 35 cents to us, and receive a bottle, express paid.

Richardson Lake.

Going through Middle Dam Sluice with a Row Boat. The Lost Cow. The Lady Fisherman.

No firing of guns or ringing of bells (with the exception of meal time) for the glorious Fourth. Wind blowing and rain pouring down is our celebration. But what do fishermen care for the rain. All they care for is when darkness sets in. Fishing this season has not been up to its standard, but it is gradually getting better.

The largest trout taken this year at Middle Dam weighed nine pounds and five ounces. It was taken by a Mr. Edwards of Lowell, Mass. On the second of this month R. N. Parish of Montville, Conn., caught off the dam a four and a half pounder.

We wish all fishermen were like Mr. Parish. Trout that weigh less than quarter of a pound he returns to the lake again. Mr. Parish last fall caught five trout that averaged seven pounds and five ounces each. They were all taken with a fly.

There will be extra good fishing at Middle Dam this month and next. The agent, W. H. Felker, for the Union Water Power Co., has closed down three gates.

Yesterday, the third, Mr. Felker and E. F. Coburn, the cook at Middle Dam, thought they would celebrate as it was so near the fourth. They took a row boat and went through the sluice. It was the first time that it was ever done. They went through at a two minute clip and got quite a ducking, but the boat stood it well and kept her side up, and so did they.

There is very good fly fishing at B. Pond and Pond in river. A trout estimated to weigh twelve pounds was hooked a short time ago. He was played thirty minutes but finally tore away. A number of four pounders have been taken at B. Pond.

The new law which was passed on this pond last winter prohibits fishing after July 20th, which makes it close time until May 20th, 1892. There has been considerable said about this special law. We have been informed by parties who ought to know that only fly fishing was allowed, but the law reads as follows: Any person may take trout in said waters with a rod, single line and artificial flies or single baited hook.

Trout taken from this pond are very gamey. They act more like a bass and their meat is of a very deep color.

Game is very plentiful within a quarter of a mile from the camp. A gentleman moose evaded his buckboard fare last week by walking two miles on the carry road which leads to Sunday Cove. Fresh deer tracks are seen every day. Four bears have already been tracked this season. They could have been captured, but hunters prefer to let them go this time of the year as the fur is worthless.

The lake at this writing is very low. A row boat has to go out and meet the steamer at Middle Dam.

At the Upper Dam last week the wheel at the saw mill broke and in consequence they have to drain the pool. They are at the present time digging a ditch so as to draw off the water. It will take about four weeks to make the repairs.

J. A. French who leases the Upper Dam House has been doing a very good business so far this season and has a good outlook for the Fall fisherman.

The Middle Dam Camp under its new management has far exceeded its expectations and H. A. Mills seems to be with the public. The right man in the right place.

Two fishermen, F. L. Irish of Buckfield, and his friend Z. W. Hall of Lewiston, caught this forenoon with bait, off the apron of the dam a string of twenty trout that averaged one pound each and also one that weighed four and a half pounds.

We expect to see the record broken, with a fly this summer by a lady, the wife of W. H. Felker who is an enthusiast as well as an expert with the rod and reel. Bears don't scare Mrs. Felker. Whether they think it would not pay as regards to satisfying their appetite or we cannot tell (with apologies). This lady can be seen most any day fishing alone down the river and always returns with a string of fish.

H. A. Bradeen of Camp Forest Haven lost his cow a week ago. She had wandered around the woods. She was found four days afterwards in the Narrows at Tom French's wood yard, a distance of eight miles from Mr. Bradeen's.

Camps owned by private individuals are all deserted.

Hon. Nelson Dingley and family were at Middle Dam last week.

Bridgton Academy.

Thursday, July 2, was a gala day at North Bridgton, the occasion being Graduating Day of the class of '1891 of the Academy. Students of former terms, both graduates and others began to arrive early in the week and by Wednesday all the members of the class of 1889, except one, were here, having arranged for a reunion dinner at the Bridgton House at Bridgton Centre, and after their return to North Bridgton, they held high carnival, enlivening the village with songs, yells, bonfires and illuminations, till daylight did appear.

The following from the Bridgton News will be read with pleasure by all friends of the academy. The programs of the graduating exercises and concert we published last week.

They presented a very acceptable appearance as they marched upon the stage; neither were they less deserving of credit for the tact and racy expression of ideas used in handling their subjects. The ladies' dresses were expecially fine, in perfect taste, and added not a little to as pleasing a sight as is seldom our lot to see. From the four corners of the Hall were hung the evergreen and bunting. The arch, with the class motto in gold and white; a large evergreen horseshoe with "Good Luck" in flower letters, and an evergreen wheel with "Time, tastily arranged in clover heads, were the chief decorations and made a pleasant variation from those of former years. A very pretty tribute of flowers adorned the stage, a token of remembrance from the graduating class to the memory of Mr. Gammon, one of its members, who died at the beginning of the senior year.

After the exercises Mr. Barton announced the winners of Amos K. Tilden prizes for spelling, as follows: First, Sadie G. Milliken, West Baldwin, Webster's Unabridged dictionary. Second, Mabel G. Dresser, Standish, Worcester's Unabridged dictionary. Third, Ida F. Blethen, Arlington, Mass., Handy Volumes of Shakspeare.

Among the visitors present, the following were noticed: Amos K. Tilden, esq., of Boston, Slate Commissioner of Pharmacy and ex-member of Boston Supt. School Committee; G. F. Robinson of Kennebunk, Mr. MetCalf of New Portland, Joseph S. Stearns of Lovell, S. C. Perry of the firm of Cleaves & Perry, Portland, besides many from the classes graduated in more recent years.

No one acquainted with the school during the last four years would fail to note its marked and decided growth, not only in numbers, but, as might reasonably be expected, in diversity and depth of learning. Giving credit where it is due, we turn immediately to Mr. Barton, and his corps of willing and able teachers, whose zealous efforts seconded by an awakened on the part of the scholars, have contributed so much to these needed improvements. The attendance during the year has been the largest in the history of the school, 330; and for the summer term, 95. The class graduating this summer have taken the entrance tests to Bowdoin College as is now becoming customary, and of the class, E. L. Whitney, B. F. Frisbee, E. P. Goodwin and W. R. Robinson have completed the classical course and will probably enter college; the others have pursued either the scientific or a select course.

In the evening a large and appreciative audience, in Academy Hall, enjoyed the very fine Commencement Concert. The talent comprised the Temple Quartet of Boston—T. E. Johnson, 1st tenor, E. F. Webber, 2d tenor, H. A. Cook, baratone, A. C. Ryder, basso; the Imperial Mandolin and Guitar Club of Boston, W. A. Cole, banjo soloist, and Sigo Carlo Carciotto, mandolin soloist, and violin trick solo, P. H. Foley, banjo and humorous songs, Walter Vreeland, xylophone and guitar soloist; Miss Hester B. Holmes of Boston, dramatic reader, and Emma Merrill of Gray, Me., vocalist.

This was followed by a reception to the class of '91, by the class of '92, comprising marches, games, etc., and a general good time fraternally, under charge of a committee of arrangements—B. C. Day, Agnes Baker and Ethel Knights, and which was a happy climax to the very successful commencement.

The following of the Alumni in addition to those already mention were noticed in the crowd: Sidney G. Stacy of the John Hopkin's Institute, A. C. Dresser, formerly principal of Bethel academy, now supervisor of schools of Rockland, Merton L. Kimball, supervisor of schools Norway, James A. Nichols of Bowdoin College.

A very pleasant episode was the presentation of a very expensive plush trimmed patent rocker by the graduating class to Principal Barton.

Thus has closed one of the most successful years in the annuls of the Academy, and the prospects for the coming year are most flattering. A large number of rooms and boarding places are already engaged for the fall term by "new comers;" and the absolute need of another building increases with each term, which will probably be supplied before another season, through the generosity of an alumnus, the order for a suitable plan being already in the hands of a competent architect, to contain a gymnaseum, a large dining room and ample accommodation for the family that may have charge of the gentlemen's club. For out door sports there have been made two tennis courts and a new base ball ground on land donated by James Noble and Geo. S. Farnsworth is nearly completed in a much nearer and better location than the old ground.

The Health of the Child.

Dr. Brush of Mount Vernon, N. Y., makes the following, among other good suggestions for the preservation of the health of children:

"If the weather is propitious, the baby should be sent out daily after it is six weeks old. At this age the baby should always be carried. Baby-carriages are altogether too handy a contrivance. A young baby is put in, taken out of doors, and usually falls asleep; having been habituated to sleep in a much warmer temperature than that out of doors, this is alone a source of danger to the young infant. The jolting of a baby-carriage is altogether too severe for a young child. Very often when the child is brought in it is still asleep, and for fear of disturbing it, it is allowed to complete its slumbers with its out-of-door clothes on. I make it a rule to sanction a baby-carriage only when a child is old enough to sit up and support its own back. An infant carried in a nurse's arm is far less apt to be chilled by the out-door air, as it gets considerable warmth from the nurse's body, and the movements of the nurse in walking are gentle in comparison with the jolting of a baby-carriage. I find very often that these baby-carriages are used as cradles by families who, in sympathy with the prevailing fashion, have abandoned the rocking cradle. Now the back and forth motion of one of these carriages is surely a rather rough one for a small infant. I cannot conceive myself that the rocking cradle is not a good thing; it is very soothing to the child and the motion cannot in any sense be called a jarring or disturbing action. With many children it is an absolute necessity that you have some means of quieting them so as to promote sleep. I have seen several families of late years who, by the advice of their physician, have not adopted the use of a rocking cradle for their infants, and have been obliged to use the carriage or some dummy sucking contrivance. I therefore continue to recommend the good old rocking cradle.

Several years ago my friend, Dr. Campbell, called attention to the necessity of taking more care of the hair of children. In scrofulous children the hair grows with exceeding rapidity, and, from its marked addition to the beauty of the child, the mother is very loath to cut it from the head of either boys or girls. Young children get long hair tangled during the night, which disturbs their sleep; the combing out and arranging in curls and braids is a tedious process that makes the children irritable, and this accounts for many long-haired children appearing weak or puny. Boys' hair should always be kept short, and girls' hair also, if they show any signs of irritability or disturbed sleep. Children ought never to be allowed to go to bed hungry. Bread, of which children consume large quantities, should not be made with any of the baking powders now in such common use, for they are apt to get too many free chemical agents that cannot by any possible means be good for the stomach. The old-fashioned yeast-raised bread is decidedly the best. The child should have its breakfast as soon as it is dressed in the morning. Its stockings should always fit tightly and its shoes loosely. The toenails should be attended to regularly; they ought always to be cut square and the corners never rounded down to allow the flesh to grow over, which is often the cause of ingrowing nails that are so painful and sometimes last through life.—Arch. of Pediatrics.

About Visiting.

There are two classes of persons who should visit only their nearest and dearest, or the very good. The nearest and dearest may put up with their failings through natural affection, the very good by means of acquired grace. These two classes are chronic egotists and chronic dyspeptics.

Chronic egotists as a class include all who make even a day's visit unannounced, all who are late at breakfast and habitually unpunctual in keeping engagements, all who ruthlessly impose their whims and freaks on a strange household, all who expect to be amused from morning until night, and all who cannot accommodate their conversation to the prevailing tone of the house.

In the first place, no visit must be made unexpectedly. Only the conventional call has that privilege, for this leaves the one we call on free to excuse herself if she so desires. And by way of parenthesis it may be said that nothing is so silly and childish as to take offence because a lady sends word that she is engaged when we call. It is obviously impossible for her always to be on duty.

So with the longer visit. We have not the right to assume that any hostess is always prepared to receive us, or to receive any guests. General invitations are often given. Let them become particular before you accept. When a specific invitation is sent, answer as promptly as possible. Any unnecessary delay in accepting or declining, keeps the person who is seeking to be kind in awkward suspense. When you have set a day and hour for your arrival, let no trivial circumstance change your plans; and when the unavoidable happens, telegraph or write at once the cause of your delay. Never make the mistake of appearing sooner than you are expected.

There is often remissness in forwarding luggage. Be prepared to manage without it for one night. A small handbag will make that possible. Pray do not make your innocent hosts uncomfortable because your trunks are not on hand. The chances are very greatly in favor of its turning up in good condition the next day. At any rate, your entertainers are not to blame, and the interest in the whereabouts of the missing piece of baggage as a subject of conversation is soon exhausted.

In all things conform to the rule of the house. If you are visiting in the country do not keep people up long after nine o'clock. Retire to your room and read if their hours are too early to permit you to sleep. If you are from the country and visiting in the city, do not tramp about the house and pervade it at six o'clock in the morning. You will be sadly in the way, and it can do you no permanent harm to lie in bed a little longer, or at least stay in your room.

The hours between breakfast and noon are always busy ones for the mistress of a house. The most agreeable visitors efface themselves during the morning, saying frankly: "I know you are occupied this morning. Please do not think of me at all. I shall enjoy reading or writing or walking." All the fresher and more eager to give you a pleasant afternoon will your hostess be if you take care of yourself before lunch time. This gives her the leisure to provide for her children's wants and to order her household. And, by the way, if you are annoyed or nervous when children laugh and talk, do not visit where they live. Their natural spirits in their own home cannot be repressed during your stay, and you will find that their parents, by curious perversity, are fonder of them than of you. But if your own children accompany you, see to it that they do not disturb other people. It is always an experiment to take little ones on a visit, and hardly ever a successful one. Any idea of rest or recreation for the mother, under such circumstances, is a fallacious one. She will go home worn to the bone.—Country Gentleman.

Children's day was observed at our church June 28th. The house was decorated with evergreens, pictures, potted plants and flowers. Several canaries added their sweet music to the children's voices. The exercises consisted of the program of "The Pearl Gatherers." A tasteful canopy was constructed over the pulpit chair which was occupied by the personator of Religion. It was a happy occasion.

The Shepard family recently gave an entertainment here which was largely attended and greatly enjoyed.

The Kinotograph.

Mr. Edison's Latest and Most Surprising Invention.—Phonography and Photography Combined.

Mr. Thomas A. Edison, the inventor, has given to a press correspondent a full description of his latest and most surprising device called the kinotograph, which we referred to in brief some time ago, and which in many respects is a combination of the phonography with photography. Mr. Edison said: "The kinotograph is a machine combining electricity with photography, so that a man may sit in his drawing room and see reproduced upon a screen the stage of a distant theatre, may observe the action of the actors exactly, and also hear the voices of the players or the music of an opera. So exact is the instrument that every muscle of the face and every expression is faithfully reproduced. The machine will, for instance, reproduce a boxing match. The whole scene is reproduced every blow struck is seen perfectly, and even the sound of the blows can be heard.

The kinotograph has only to be placed upon a table in front of the stage. The machine photographs the scene, and records the minutest sound. It begins to work as soon as the curtain is raised, recording the motions of the actors at the rate of 46 impressions per second. This is sufficient to give a continuous picture of what is happening. The photographic slips are then developed and replaced in the machine, and a projecting lens is substituted for the photographic lens. Now, by adjusting the phonograph and and by means of a calcium light, the whole scene may be reproduced in your drawing room. As the impressions are permanently taken, the scene may be reproduced years later, and as many times as anyone desires to see it. The photographs are reproduced in minature or in life-size, so that nothing of the performance need be lost." The kinotograph, speaking roughly, is a camera arranged in a new way to do new work. In a small box containing the camera Mr. Edison places a roll of gelatine film, three-quarters of an inch wide and of any length desired.

The interior of the camera is arranged in the ordinary way. The gelatine strip is unrolled from one spindle and rerolled upon another, and it is in passing from the first spindle to the second that it is carried before the lens of the camera. The shutters of the camera are arranged to be worked by a shaft attached to a cylinder of a phonograph. This shaft also works the spindles which carry the rolls of film, and the mechanism of the camera is so arranged that when the shutters are open the spindles stop, and the gelatine film is fixed before the lens. In less than the forty-sixth part of a second the photograph is taken, the shutters snap, and the spindles turn the gelatine strip, which moves on for a new photograph. The arrangement is so complete and extraordinarily rapid that 46 photographs may be taken in one second.

Mr. Edison intends to reproduce an entire opera by means of this invention. He does not mean to show it in miniature, but will represent the stage with the actors moving, speaking and singing. The players will be life size, and the music will be exactly reproduced. The result is a gigantic photograph, not merely of the actors but of the stage, scenery and furniture. In order to obtain this result it will be necessary to have a phonograph large enough to contain a cylinder capable of recording every sound made during the thirty minutes which is about the average duration of an act in a play. It would, of course, be impossible to change the cylinders of the phonograph or stop the kinotograph during the act. As a means of amusement, Mr. Edison's new invention promises to be a great success. From the reel of film which will contain the original photograph, Mr. Edison expects to make numberless duplicates. These will be sold, so that a person owning a machine may buy any opera he may wish to reproduce in his own house.

That tired feeling now so ofted heard of, is entirely overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which gives mental and bodily strength.

Chas. Dickens on Labor.

"Cant as we may, and as we shall to the end of time, it is very much harder for the poor to be virtuous than it is for the rich, and the good that is in them shines the brighter for it.

"In many a noble mansion lives a man the best of husbands and of fathers, whose private worth in both capacities is justly lauded to the skies, but bring him here upon this crowded deck, strip from his fair young wife her silken dresses and jewels, unbind her braided hair, stamp early wrinkles on her brow, pinch her pale cheeks with care and much privation array her faded form in coarsely patched attire, let there be nothing but his love to deck her out, and you shall put it to the proof indeed. To change his station in the world that he shall see in those young things who climb about his knee not records of his wealth and name, but little wrestlers with him for his daily bread, so many poachers on his scanty meal, so many units to divide his every comfort, and further reduce its small amount. In lieu of the endearments of childhood in its sweetest aspect, heap upon him all its pains and wants, its sickness and ills, its fretfulness, caprice, and querulous endurance, let its prattle be not of engaging infant fancies, but cold and thirst and hunger, and if his fatherly affection outlive all this, and he be patient watchful tender, careful of his children's lives and and mindful always of their joys and sorrows, then send him back to parliament and pulpit, and quarter sessions, and when he hears fine talk of the depravity of those who live from hand to mouth and labor hard to do it, let him speak up as one who knows, and tell those holders forth that they, by parallel with such a class, should be high angels in their daily lives, and lay but humble siege to Heaven at last."

Ladies employed in fashionable stores whose duties keep them standing all day, should send 2c. stamp to Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for "Guide to Health and Etiquette."

Pleasant for the Passengers.

When I was up in Northern Wisconsin, the other day, writes a correspondent, I saw something that caused chills to chase each other in rapid succession down my spinal column, and that made my hair (that is, the rim of hirsute growth that adorns the base of my skull) to stand erect. The train upon which I travelled stopped for dinner at a little water tank station. Just as the train was about to pull out, a grimy looking individual staggered upon the platform and started to fall aboard. The conductor was a new man on the run, but he didn't propose to allow the intoxicated individual to get aboard.

"Look here!" shouted the conductor, as the sooty specimen went to get on. "You are too drunk to get on. Where's your ticket?"

"Hav-haven't, got any," stuttered the drunken fellow.

"Then you can't get on."

"Yesh, I kin; you can't stop me. I'm the engineer of this train. There ain't no fresh conductor can put me off the train."—Exchange.

Lo, the Poor Indian!

Lucy M. Hall, M. D. of Brooklyn, indulges in a supposititious experiment with an untamed Indian of the plains. The following is the climax of the experiment:—

"Then put him into the garb of woman—feeble, delicate, gossamer woman—(who, by the way, ladies and gentlemen, has greater powers of endurance than any other animal on earth,) into the tight corsets, which would jam his elastic ribs into his pendulous liver, his writhing stomach up against his wobbling heart and gasping lungs, his whole nutritive apparatus, upward, downward, sidewise, anywhere, so that nineteen inches of steel and whalebone would compass his twenty-five-inch middle; add the dozen or more articles, with their aggregation of bands, strings, buttons, hooks, loops, clasps, and pins; place about him zone after zone of tight bandages, from which are suspended dozens and dozens of yards of gathered, puckered, plaited, and festooned material; tilt his body all out of plumb by fastening under his heels a wooden peg two inches high, and crush his toes into the space of a good sized thimble. Weigh him down with a long, heavy outside wrap, perch a bonnet upon his head, and stretch a dotted vail over his eyes, put his hand into tight kid gloves, and into these a pocket-book and an umbrella; then send him out for business or for pleasure on a moderately wet morning or afternoon; let him keep his long flapping skirts, his shoes and his ankles dry and clean, his feathers and bangs in curl and his temper unruffled. Then ask him when he gets back to you if he lives to do so, which he would rather be—a lovely civilized woman or a howling savage—and see what he will say."—Sanitarian.

DANA'S SARSAPARILLA CURES!

Going Into Details.

Mrs. H. was travelling west with her twin daughters then about two months old. In the central part of the state a typical "maiden lady" boarded the train, and immediately was captivated with the babies, when the following dialogue took place between her and Mrs. H.:

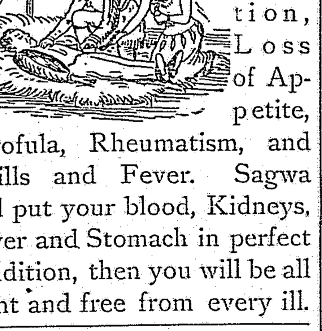

"What sweet babies?"
"Yes."
"And are they twins?"
"Yes."
"Both boys?"
"No."
"Boy and a girl?"
"No."
"Both girls?"
"Yes."
"And are you the mother?"
"Yes, I am the mother."
"Of both?"—Harper's Monthly.

Small boys and green apples are now one in body. Use Johnson's Anodine Lin. for colic.

"Father, what is commencement at college?" "It is the commencement of the student's realization that the world was not made for him exclusively."

Dyspepsia
Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.
Distress After Eating — Sick Headache — Heart-burn — Sour Stomach
"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced."

Not a Leap in the Dark.

BY C. K.

The spirit of mortals at times seem to despair
When they think of eternity, and what there is there.
We are born to live, and then to die;
And the reason it is so we do not know why.
If we live out our three score and ten years,
Our lives are a mixture of joy, and mirth, sorrow and fears.
The filial and conjugal ties that binds us together
Will not last long, for they will soon sever.
And we shall leave all below that we possessed,
And if we leave a good name it will be better than the rest.
There is some that seem to say, just stop and hark,
For I tell you that death is a leap in the dark.
O my God! I know very well that cannot be,
For Christ died on the cross and died for me,
And rose the third day victorious from the grave
And made the way possible the sinful and the depraved to save.
And his goodness and beauty we never can trace
Until we behold him in God's kingdom face to face;
And then we shall no longer stop and hark
To the idle story that death is a leap in the dark.

Albany, July 6, 1891.

Bethel Celebration.

The morning of July 4th opened with threatening rain, still before sunrise the young American spirit which is exhaled on the smoky breath of firearms, torpedoes and fire crackers, or blown through fish horns, was manifested in a way which forbade slumber to the weary eyelids of many a citizen.

The day was ushered in as usual with ringing of bells. At 7 o'clock a. m., the streets were alive with people whose chief aim was to behold the horribles. Just as the fantasties or the divinities of the early morning, under whatever name they have, were forming in procession the overruling Being took the matter into his hands and sent down upon boldest and most horrible faces ingenuity of mask sellers could devise a fearful discharge of atmospheric electricity. Peal upon peal reverberated through the air and the windows of heaven were wide open thrown and the rain fell in sheets for about one hour.

About 8 a. m. the horribles with one and two horse teams formed into line ½ mile in length appeared coming up church street, arrayed in garments apparently borrowed from the old clothes closets of some charitable society. They were looked upon by an immense crowd but they put a bold face on it. Indians could have entered into successful competition with the blotched and bloated countenances which beamed from behind the muskets of the cow boys.

The procession was headed by the Bethel Cornet Band. Mr. Young the leader never was feeling better. Their conveyance was Bartlett's Ark mounted on four wheels and drawn by four horses.

Bethel health department was well represented. C. Rowe's manufactory of all kinds of goods, best in the market, drew much attention. Benson's meat market, cattle's dangling legs flipt up like sheep tails. Bethel lock-up mounted on two wheels containing two tramps under charge of Clint Barker took the cake. Dr. Hill went a fishing, fell into deep water, could not swim. Dr. Tuell with teeth extractor was a great take-off finely represented. Walter Wood Mowing machine, style 1777. Perkin's barber shop well got up. Buffalo Bill wild West show was laughable. J. G. Rich's pension department all say was a big get off. Gipsey family well represented. Among the principal teams was Dr. Morton's, the old horse trailing along, feeding by the roadside, while under his gig was suspended a bee hive.

Bicycle race was won by Tad Skillings; wheelbarrow race won by Bennett; fireman's contest was won by Hose Company No. 1, time 1.39; volunteers 1.40; potato race won by M. Conner; sack race by Howard Wiley; 100 dash by A. Wiley; 2d dash B. Andrews.

Ball game at 3.30 p. m. was very exciting. Greased pig, John Coburn took the cake; greased pole, J. Currier took the prize. Band concert at 7 p. m. in their new Band stand.

The streets being in such a muddy condition and the weather so bad the field sports and trotting that was to follow were given up.

In the evening a big crowd filled the Common to witness the fireworks which were very fine.

The celebration as a whole was highly creditable to Charles E. Benson who was the chairman of the committee in charge. It called together a very large crowd of orderly, well behaved people. We saw only two men who had been drinking.

Everything passed off to the entire satisfaction of all. A. C.

NORTH WEST BETHEL.

Clyde Bartlett closed a successful term of school in district No. 5 the 3d inst. The afternoon was made a memorable one as Mr. and Mrs. Seth Mason and Miss Bartlett gave an Orchard Party from 1 o'clock till 3. About fifty people were present and with many hammocks, fine music, lots of merry nonsense and a treat of ice cream, cake, oranges candy and lemonade the time passed all too swiftly and four o'clock came and Herman Skillings (may his shadow never grow less) harnessed his team and soon 20 young folks were seated in the hayrack, but one lingered, the "pride of the party" was missing.—Miss Clyde could not be found. After shouting, searching, blowing trumpets awhile she and Hannibal came into the range of our vision leisurely wending their way down the road. After Miss Bartlett was seated in the wagon, Mr. Mason requested the crowd to give three cheers for the two teachers (Alice Baker who taught over the line in Gilead being present with her scholars). The cheers were given with hearty good will, and with a "gee Tom," in Herman's stentorian tone, the hayrack with its merry load rattled away down to Mayville where Miss Bartlett was safely deposited at her own home and the crowd a little subdued returned home.

Though we mourn our school days ended,
Mourn the tasks and pleasures blended,
Yet in memories domain
We shall often meet again.

Ellen Penley from Mass. is spending her vacation with her brother, M. Penley.

Helen Bennett from Berlin Falls spent the 4th with her aunt, Mrs. Mason.

Ardella Bennett has been stopping here for a while.

Warner Kendall and George Stearns have gone to Yarmouth haying.

Mrs. Hiram Wilson's health is quite poor.

Lin Bartlett is driving S. L. Mason's three years old colt "Monte Christo,"—a good colt in good hands.

A Mr. Poole is working for H. Skillings.

Mrs. M. Kimball from East Bethel visited her sister, Mrs. W. S. Wight, last week. UNO.

MASON.

Rev. I. A. Bean and wife of Conway, N. H., were in town a few days ago on a short visit to his brother, F. I. Bean, and other friends.

The rain on the fourth made it unusually quiet here. Some guns and fire crackers were fired and there were some fireworks at Nellie Bean's in the evening.

Clara Morrill went to Yarmouth 4th.

Hiram Tyler is well under way haying. Mr. Witham has also commenced, cutting some two tons last week.

Mr. Witham's mare Topsy dropped a nice horse colt July 2d.

D. E. Mills is trying to trap the bears which seem to be quite plenty.

A. G. Lovejoy goes back to Otisfield to cut his hay there before cutting it here.

Geo. Bennett has been helping S. O. Grover hoe his corn.

Roy Grover was home to spend 4th.

Corn and potatoes are growing finely and so are potato bugs.

L. H. Tyler has a market for his butter and sends it to Berlin, N. H.

Eggs are 20 cents.

SOUTH HARTFORD.

A rainy day for the Fourth made it very unpleasant for those wishing to attend the celebration.

Eben Andrews one morning last week, when he went to the barn, found his black colt down through a scuttle, and after getting a number of men to help, he succeeded in getting it up; but the colt is hurt very badly.

Clifford Hutchinson and family, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Davis of Auburn, was the guests of Mrs. Rodney Hutchinson last week.

Laura Ricker and Nettie F. Howard returned to their homes from Waltham, Mass., to spend their vacation.

Nellie Allen was at home over Sunday.

GREENWOOD.

One day last week, three young men from North Paris, came to this place on a fishing excursion. Having a boat they tried their luck near the entrance of the pond, when from lack of skill, or some other mishap, the boat suddenly capsized. One who was unable to swim, immediately sank, but by good luck he was near enough to the boat to obtain a firm grasp which he held until rescued by his companions.

L. T. Roberts and wife have been to Palmyra on a visit to their daughter.—While there, Mr. Roberts was taken violently ill from blood poison caused by a wound in his foot by a rusty nail some time last winter. They have returned, however, and Mr. Roberts is once more about his business.

Mrs Sylvester Yates was suddenly summoned to North Yarmouth last Wednesday, whose daughter Tessa is dangerously ill.

The roads have been put in first-class order; the best for several years.

Uncle Jacob Emmons, aged 97 hears, is still able to ride about, attend to business as usual, and do a fair day's work.

NORTH PARIS.

Lida Benson is gaining slowly, her fever having left her.

Carlt Bacon, one day recently, caught sixty pickerel in Moose pond.

J. M. Pike and wife are at her father's, N. J. Cushman's. They have been teaching in Buckfield.

A very quiet Fourth here, save for the usual midnight salute which was very faintly rendered.

J. H. Dunham, who lives on the road from North to West Paris, made a remarkable hit lately, killing four woodchucks at one discharge. They were nearly grown. Charlie Churchill made one similar a few years ago, killing two muskrats and a mink at one shot. We do not say it was due to superior marksmanship but probably to luck.

Sweet corn is looking very well in this vicinity, and promises to be a good crop. Hay is fair.

W. H. Childs is quite poorly in health.

Asher Harper of Errol, N. H., has been visiting friends here.

E. H. Andrews has a novel carriage, it being an old fashioned thorough brace, two wheeled chaise. Its antiquity attracts considerable attention. It looks nicely, having been painted and renovated all over, and above all rides like a boat. N. Y. X.

NORWAY LAKE.

Dr. G. W. Hazelton lost a horse last week.

B. G. Barrows and a Mr. Chamberlain were at W. S Partridge's last Sunday.

Lewis Monk and wife of South Paris visited at Bradbury's July 4th.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Ballard arrived at James Crockett's July 4th, from Cambridgeport, Mass. Mr. B. remained over Sunday and returned to Boston Monday morning. Mrs. B. will visit relatives in town.

Mrs. E. J. Noyes is at home from Lovell.

The fishing parties are numerous on the lake.

On Monday morning of last week, Chas. Boobier had occasion to rise at the early hour of 2 a. m. and passing into the shed, found the door wide open, knowing well that the door was closed the night before. He passed on to the stable and found the back door open, the wagon turned ready for use, robes, and other things packed in the wagon ready for a start. Mr. B. thinks if his wife had not had a tooth-ache that night he would have been minus a team. It is an ill wind that blows nobody any good.

Fred Perry raised some nice strawberries this year.

Mrs. Chas. Walker moved from here to Norway last week.

Geo Pike has leased the store, part of what was the Walker stand. Geo. has a job, painting Dr. Hazelton's buildings on the hill.

WEST BETHEL.

New England Weather Bulletin.

New England Meteorological Society, for the week ending July 3d.

The week just passed has been very favorable in New England for all crops, although the weather has been slightly cool for corn, and many hoed crops are in need of more rain.

Temperature and sunshine have been slightly below the normal. No very warm days or very cold nights. The weather has been cloudy and unsettled, although little more than a trace of rain has fallen anywhere, and none at all in some places.

Cloudy weather has hindered hay cutting which has begun as far north as southern Vermont and New Hampshire. It will not be general in those states and in Maine, until the coming week and the one after. Grass in fields and pastures is now growing very fast. Correspondents say that in pastures it is gaining on the stock and they are doing well. Dairy cows are yielding better than the average. In fields already cut there is promise of a good second crop. The crop shows up better than expected. Many report from northern New England that grass is up to the average.

Grain is in prime condition. Oats a little late in the north, with all hoed crops. Rye in places the best for years. Corn is a little backward on account of cold weather of late, but promises well. Potatoes show the effects of the dry weather on light soil. Many reports say that while the vines show rank and green the tubers are very small.

Wild fruit abundant. Apples are falling off badly in some sections. A light crop of Baldwins is expected generally. Strawberry crop is heavy, notwithstanding frosts and drough. The indications promise a most bountiful harvest throughout New England.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—U. S. Gov't Report, Aug. 17, 1889.

Hannibal Hamlin.

Sudden Death of the Ex-Vice President Saturday Night.

Ex-Vice President Hannibal Hamlin died at Bangor Saturday evening, July 4th at 8.15 o'clock. He was down town in the afternoon and went to the Tarratine Club rooms. He was playing pedro when his head fell forward on his chest. A gentleman remarked: "The Senator seems to feel badly." Mr Hamlin said, "I do."

The men gathered around him and he was taken to a lounge and physicians attended him. No pulse was visible for half an hour and it was thought they could not bring him out; but finally he revived somewhat and managed to articulate feebly.

The family were sent for and soon Mrs. Hamlin, Gen. Charles Hamlin, his son, and wife, and other members were at his side. All was done for him that was in human power to do, but he failed and passed peacefully away at 8.15 o'clock.

Mr. Hamlin leaves a widow and three sons, Gen. Charles Hamlin, a reporter of decisions, Hannibal E. Hamlin, esq., a lawyer of Ellsworth, and Frank Hamlin, now living in Chicago.

Mr. Hamlin has been perceptibly failing for a year, but seemed about as usual that afternoon and walked down town.

The remains of the distinguished dead were removed from the Tarratine club rooms where he died to his residence on Fifth street.

Hannibal Hamlin, one of the most interesting figures in American history during the present generation, was born in Paris, Oxford county, Me., Aug. 27, 1809.

He was prepared for a college education, but, by the death of his father was obliged to stay on the farm until he became of age.

Like many of our famous men, he learned the printing trade, but gave it up upon being admitted to the bar in 1833. He practiced law in New Hampden, Me., till 1848, and was a member of the Legislature from 1836 to 1840, and again in 1847.

He was Speaker of the House, 1837-1840, and, in the latter year, received the democratic nomination for Congress. It was during the Harrison campaign, and Mr. Hamlin introduced an element of excitement till then unknown in Maine, by holding joint discussions with his competitor. He was defeated that year, but elected two years later and again in 1844.

In 1848 he was sent to the United States Senate to fill the vacancy caused by the death of John Fairfield, and was re-elected in 1851, but resigned in 1857, having been elected Governor of Maine by the Republicans.

Within a month after his inauguration as Governor he resigned, having been again chosen United States Senator. He served in the Senate till 1861, when he resigned, in view of his election the preceding fall as Vice President on the ticket with Abraham Lincoln.

He presided over the Senate from Mar. 4, 1861, to March 3, 1865, when his successor, Andrew Johnson, supplanted him. Many republicans considered it very unwise to drop Mr. Hamlin in 1865.

Shortly after his retirement from the Vice Presidency Mr. Hamlin was appointed collector at the port of Boston, but resigned in the following year.

From 1861 till 1865 he had acted as regent of the Smithsonian institution, and was reappointed in 1870, continuing to act for the next twelve years, during which time he became dean of the board.

He was again elected to the United States Senate, serving two terms, from 1869 till 1881, and at the expiration of his second term became United States Minister to Spain, a position which he resigned within a year, to return to his home.

He was made L. L. D. by Colby University when it was Waterville College, and he was one of its trustees for over 20 years.

Although originally a democrat, he was an anti-slavery man, and that fact led him to leave the party.

When the "Wilmot Proviso" was before the House of Representatives, Mr. Wilmot being temporarily absent, Mr. Hamlin, seeing his anti-slavery friends in the greatest confusion, and knowing that a moment's delay might be fatal, secured the passage of the bill.

Soon after his election as Vice President, in 1860, Mr. Hamlin, by invitation, met President-elect Lincoln at Chicago. When the two men met, entirely unattended, Mr. Lincoln asked, as he extended his hand: "Have we ever been introduced to each other, Mr. Hamlin?"

"I think not," was the reply.

"That is my impression," said Mr. Lincoln, "but I remember once hearing you make a speech in the Senate—a speech that I was particularly struck with, for the reason that it was filled chock up with the very best kind of anti-slavery doctrine."

"Well, that is singular," replied Mr. Hamlin, "for my first recollection of you, Mr. Lincoln, is of hearing you make a speech in the House—a speech so full of good humor and sharp points that I was convulsed with laughter."

The friendship between Lincoln and Hamlin begun at this meeting, continued to be of the most cordial character during the four years of the war, and up to the day of his death Mr. Hamlin always spoke of the martyred president with a degree of reverence and affection that was extremely touching to all who heard him.

At the dinner in commemoration of Lincoln's birthday but a short time ago, Mr. Hamlin was the chief guest and his speech, in which he advocated making the day a legal holiday like Washington's natal day, was received with stirring enthusiasm, two members of Congress who were present promising to do all in their power to secure that end during the next session.

For many years Mr. Hamlin had resided in Bangor during the winter, having a farm just outside the city, which it was his delight to cultivate for recreation in the pleasanter portion of the year.

Since his retirement from office, he had generally taken a keen interest and an active part in political canvasses, not only in his own State, but at times outside.

Until recently he has taken daily long constitutionals, and one of his favorite diversions was dancing.

On the street Mr. Hamlin was a striking figure. His tall form, slightly bent, was always clothed in the old-fashioned black swallow-tailed coat, and he wore a silk hat, slightly tipped back upon his head. He never discarded the dickey and stock of the statesmen of a former generation.

In his religious beliefs he was not only very liberal, but was the leading member and a great worker in the local Unitarian church, and president of the Maine Unitarian Association. His dislike for music was intense, and he was never seen at a concert or the opera, and he entered church after the opening musical selections, and would have liked to see church music banished altogether, so his friends say.

Up to the time of his death he had not been ill for 34 years, and he explained the long preservation of his powers as due to plenty of open-air exercises, working in the earth, and breathing its healthy odor.

During Grand Army week, last August, Mr. Hamlin was a popular visitor in Boston, receiving many attentions during his stay. He rode in the great procession on Aug. 12 with the Maine delegation, and was cheered by comrades all along the line of march.

The funeral of Mr. Hamlin was held at 3.30, Wednesday, previous to which time the remains lay in state in the Unitarian church.
